A Winter Reflection: The Spirit of LCMS Future

*A final note from Robert Barraco, MD,
President 2015-2015*

As I sit here in an airport waiting for the second flight delay in the same day, I have had time or reflect on the State of the Medical Society. I see the good and the bad, the opportunities and the threats. I see that if we are not careful, we very well could have a future without a Lehigh County Medical Society (and no I am not jaded by the frustration of not getting home tonight). Active full membership is down again, from 271 last year to 256 this year. The Medical Society could no longer afford to keep the building it has owned for 33 years and it is up for sale. Our annual socials have had poor attendance no matter the format tried. While the State Medical Society works to become more responsive to its members by further building its infrastructure to provide more value-added services, rates remain the same. As a result, members in our County are slated to pay over $700 a year to join both medical societies. With the pressures of the economy and the competition for organizational dues and donation dollars, this has become prohibitive for many. This has resulted in the threat of dissolution of County Medical Societies into regional societies disconnected from their communities. And lastly, as the providers in the state become increasingly hospital employed to the tune of 70%, many do not see the value in joining these organizations. They are incorrectly assuming that these societies are only relevant for private practitioners. Active membership in the State and County Medical Societies can and does influence legislation and practice relative to all providers in the Commonwealth, private or employed. The Spirit of LCMS Future has shown me a very bleak midwinter (or fall) vision.

But just as with the original Spirit of Christmas Future in the Dickens classic "A Christmas Carol", these are only visions of what may be, not what must be. As I said earlier, I see both the good and the bad, the opportunities as well as the threats that led to the above visions. We as members of the Lehigh County Medical Society, an institution that has lived in our community for 163 years, have the power to do something about it. With the advent of medical schools in the Lehigh Valley, we have a stronger than ever student section for which we have provided new rules to facilitate their participation. They have been active within our middle and high school programs and helping to build connections with the health professions clubs of undergraduate schools in our area. After the successful grant application by Past President Gertner, we established very successful Health Career Club programs with Raub Middle School in Allentown and interest from Allen High School in the same. We have a great opportunity to build these programs to last with our Community Fund for education but have only been able to raise $17,000 of the $100,000 dollars to endow the program.

So what do we need to change the Spirit of LCMS Future's vision from bleak to great? YOU. We need you all to step up in your own way. Whether it be to donate whatever you can to our fund to educate our youth in the inner city of Allentown about our great profession or to be active in the organization as a trustee or officer or even website developer, we need you to step up. Whether it be recruiting new members or helping our student and resident sections build a bright future, we need you to step up. We need you to bring the joy of our profession and the good works of our Society to others and not be caught up in the bah, humbug of the frustrations and vagaries of life as a provider. So as I leave this office, it is up to you what happens in our LCMS future. Your LCMS has done great things over the years for the providers and for the community. With you as a vital part, it can continue to do more. You pick the Spirit of LCMS vision you want to make real.

Thank you for the privilege of serving two terms as your President.

Bob Barraco

Proposed Immunization Changes Could Provide Greater Protections, Says PAMED President

The Pennsylvania Departments of Health and Education announced proposed changes to immunization requirements for schoolchildren during a state news conference Thursday morning, Nov. 5.

"Pennsylvania physicians through the Pennsylvania Medical Society have voiced growing concerns in recent years over immunization rates, vaccine exemptions, and occasional outbreaks of diseases such as measles," said Scott Shapiro, MD, FACC, FCPP, president of PAMED, in a statement. "Our long-standing policy has pushed to establish a parental duty to immunize their children in a complete and timely manner."

"The Pennsylvania Medical Society believes Health Secretary Karen Murphy and Education Secretary Pedro Rivera are correct in proposing changes to improve state-required immunization policy. This will help provide greater protection for Pennsylvanians."

Specifically, the departments proposed the following changes to current regulations:

- Definitions for new terms "full immunization" and "medical certificate"
- Clarifications to existing vaccine requirements
- Additional meningococcal dose before entry into the 12th grade
- Change to method of providing evidence of immunity for measles and for mumps from accepting a statement of history by parent or guardian to requiring a statement of history of disease by physician, nurse practitioner, or physician's assistant
- Replacing the eight month provisional period with the following:

- Requiring exclusion from school attendance of a child who lacks a single dose of a single dose vaccine and/or the first dose of a multiple dose vaccine

- Allowing a child that needs the next or final dose of a multiple dose vaccine five school days to obtain the next or final dose in the series before being excluded from school attendance; or

- Allowing a child needing more than one dose of a multiple-dose vaccine series beyond the five days to attend school provisionally upon the submission of a medical certificate outlining the dates for additional vaccination

- Requiring school administrators to review the medical certificate and the child's compliance at least every 30 days

- Allowing school administrators to exclude a child who does not comply with the dates in the submitted medical certificate.

- Exempting from exclusion a child who is homeless

- Exempting from exclusion for 30-days a child who is transferring from a school or country outside the commonwealth and cannot provide records

- Providing limited waiver of vaccine requirements in the event of a disaster impacting the ability of children transferring into a school to provide records, or a nationally recognized vaccine shortage

- Changing reporting times for schools to report kindergarten and 7th grade immunizations to allow schools more time to gather information and report

- Requiring schools to report electronically to obtain more accurate reporting

The departments also said that they are not proposing any changes to the religious and medical exemptions in the regulations. Read more on the Department of Health's website, including FAQs and its news release. PAMED's current policy supports these changes:

60.998 More Stringent Vaccinations

The Society supports legislation to 1) establish a parental duty to immunize their children in a complete and timely manner and 2) mandate Pennsylvania public health clinics provide all recommended immunizations as recommended by the Centers for Disease Control Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices (specifically Hepatitis B Vaccine) that supports these changes. "As any physician will tell you, vaccines play an important role in the health of all citizens, whether it's protecting yourself or others around you," said Dr. Shapiro. "We must remember that there are some patients who have medical conditions that prevent them from receiving certain immunizations, so we need to increase herd immunity to lower the risk these individuals face."
